

Now we're in the library, the room where people can study, read and keep books.

Look at the wardrobes. On the doors, there are designs that look a little like the emblems of soccer teams. They are called "crests."

Every noble family had a crest on which it reproduced something that represented it.

Fausto and Giuseppe chose a warrior, a lily, an eagle, an ox, and another thing that you'll see on the ceiling of Fausto's bedroom...

At each short end of the table, there are two globes. One shows the sky with the signs of the zodiac, and the other shows the earth.

Now look at the things on the table. When Fausto and Giuseppe were as old as you are, pens like the ones you use didn't exist. To write, they used a goose feather pen that they dipped in a little container that had ink inside it. There are at least two on this table. Can you tell me what they're called?

Answer: Ink wells
